

JK Global Opportunities Fund

August 2020

USD Class +2.75%, GBP Class +2.64%, YEN Class +1.93%, EUR Class +2.60% in August.

The Fund rose +2.75% (USD Class, net of fees) in August, led once again by our US and China tech holdings. Nvidia, Microsoft and Alibaba were the biggest contributors to Fund performance in the month. We don't have much new to say on the relentless outperformance of tech, but would note that we were taking profits on some of our top performers throughout August as markets became extremely overbought. This wasn't enough to completely shield us from the most recent sell-off in tech, but given the speed and magnitude of the fall, we are starting to see some value re-emerge.

The FED announced a new monetary policy framework at its August meeting, namely average inflation targeting. Whilst this isn't likely to change the FED's operations near-term, it does represent a profound shift in its modus operandi longer-term in our view, particularly in relation to its reaction function. Variables such as growth and employment will become irrelevant in shaping interest rate decisions and inflation will only become a constraint once it meaningfully overshoots the average inflation target, which we view as a significant dovish shift by the FED. To appreciate this, it is worth considering there would have been zero interest rate hikes between 2015 and 2018 under this framework, as opposed to the nine hikes we witnessed. We expect this to support risk assets and weigh on the Dollar longer-term, so are looking to short the DXY index into strength.

In Japan, we saw the Prime Minister, Shinzo Abe, announce his intention to step down due to a chronic health condition at the end of August. The new leader will be selected through a simplified election at a joint plenary meeting of LDP members in the upper and lower houses of the Diet, with 394 votes for Diet members and 141 for regional members, rather than a full LDP election with 394 votes for each of Diet members and regional members. As such, this simplified election will greatly reduce regional members' votes, making it relatively disadvantageous for candidates with strong regional support, namely Mr. Ishiba. This should favour the current cabinet secretary, Mr. Suga, who garners support from 5 of the 7 LDP factions and is seen as the candidate most likely to toe the line of Abenomics. Regardless of who the winner is though, we expect they won't be looking to rock the boat too much at this moment in time, which means we can expect more of the same on the policy front going forwards. The vote is scheduled for September 14, with the new Prime Minister to be named at a special session of the Diet on September 16.

Looking ahead, preliminary results from numerous late stage vaccine trials will soon be released, the earliest being from AstraZeneca/Oxford in mid-September. Moderna and Pfizer will also be publishing results from their respective trials over the next few weeks. Whilst we may still have to wait for the full results before seeing any kind of regulatory approval, these early snapshots should give us a good idea about where we are heading. If these trials yield positive results as many people are hoping, we have to be cognizant of a change in leadership away from stay-at-home tech stocks into beneficiaries of further reopenings.

Another big event on the horizon is the upcoming US election, which markets will increasingly start to discount over the next few months. Polls and betting markets show Biden's lead over Trump narrowing recently, as Trump has capitalised on social unrest in numerous states to push his law and order stance, whilst Biden has largely been absent on the campaign trail. We are reluctant to predict the winner at this stage, which we feel is dwindling in relevance compared to the very real possibility of a major constitutional crisis in the US. Unless something is done to discourage the widespread use of mail-in voting, we can envisage a scenario where Trump is crowned winner on the night, with Democrats refusing to concede the election until all mail-in votes are counted, leaving US politics in a state of limbo. Furthermore, if the result is subsequently reversed after the mail-in votes are counted, Trump may also refuse to accept the outcome due to concerns over fraud and coercion involved in the mail-in voting process. As more people turn their attention towards this eventuality, we do wonder whether the recent volatility in markets is a sign of things to come as we approach the election. We also worry this period could be littered with a host of geopolitical shenanigans, primarily between the US and China, as recent events have shown. In light of this, we are dialling-down risk due to the uncertainty created.
