

JK Global Opportunities Fund

February 2017

The Fund fell -1.11% in February (GBP Class, Net of Fees).

The Fund fell -1.11% during the month, with gains from equity positions offset by the Fund's short positions in government bonds.

There was little change in the Fund during the month. Equities continue to rally, driven by index and ETF flows, whilst volatility continues to fall. The best equity value resides in Asia and Europe, with the U.S. looking expensive. We would note that Asian equities have seen meaningful underperformance over the last five years, reflecting in part the unexciting economic and earnings backdrop during this period. However, the bad news looks priced-in now to us, and the combination of improving global economic sentiment, bearish sentiment and underweight investor positioning makes this asset class a good each way bet.

Despite traditional valuation challenges, the momentum behind the U.S. equity market, combined with favourable Trump economic policies look set to keep this asset ticking along. We favour technology stocks in this market and financials. The U.K. has just broken out of a major 16 year range which is bullish. We continue to focus on this market, as we believe the asset class looks exceptionally cheap, particularly to foreign investors. Brexit looks more than fully priced-in to us, and as a result we are finding excellent risk/reward opportunities.

We remain short French, Italian and Japanese government bonds. We expect to have these positions for some time. Our tactical currency positions continue to focus on a short position in the Renminbi. We took profits on the long Mexican peso position during the month. The US Dollar remains well bid, with the upturn in economic sentiment post-election pushing up real rate expectations in the US relative to its trading partners. We are cognizant of the strong correlation between the trade-weighted dollar and real interest rate differentials, and as such remain dollar bulls. However, the consensus nature of this view right now, combined with the fact that the dollar is expensive and a border tax unworkable (in our view), prevents us from adopting an aggressively long tactical position.
