

JK Global Opportunities Fund

January 2016

The Fund fell -5.68% in January (GBP Class, Net of Fees).

A very poor start to the year, with global markets headed southwards as macro worries came to the fore. Powerful moves in global bonds, commodities (in particular oil) and equities are signalling a growing risk of recession, deflation, and financial contagion. The US equity market is struggling, with a lacklustre profits outlook and strong US Dollar. China, and in particular the markets' focus on its 'leaky' capital account, is adding fuel to the fire, as are Middle Eastern asset sales. Recent moves in global financial stocks and credit markets generally are a real cause for concern, and despite every 'talking head' assuring the market that this is not 2008 redux, we are not so sure. There are very few signs of respite at present and we remain in risk reduction mode.

As ever, economists and market commentators are looking for a policy response. Well, as far as we are concerned further moves on interest rates/monetary policy are unlikely to have any positive effect – in fact the reverse is likely. Japan is a classic example. Kuroda introduced negative interest rates on any additional excess bank reserves at the Central Bank and the equity market and bank stocks collapsed, the YEN rose, and the 10 year Japan government bond yield moved into negative territory. Arguably the complete opposite effect to that desired and clear evidence (if any was needed) that 'funny money' monetary policy has run its course. Central bankers are out of ideas -if they had any in the first place – and will eventually wake up to the fact that you cannot solve a debt crisis with more debt. QE, which attempts to solve a crisis by inflating asset prices, despite inflated asset prices being the major symptom of the bubble that caused the crisis in the first place, is clearly flawed, and yet we are carrying on with it. Furthermore, recent talk of negative interest rates, a 'cashless society', fees on corporate cash balances etc. reflect more extreme examples of the intellectually and morally bankrupt policies of a global central bank cabal that quite frankly has blown it.

This leaves markets and investors facing a most tricky environment. Whilst there is real value starting to emerge in certain equity markets, it is difficult to see what the catalyst(s) might be that alters the negative feedback loop that has developed in risk assets. Maybe they just have to become very cheap (as we saw in 2008), and we are not there yet. In this environment cash is a sensible option as it gives the investor the opportunity – should it arise – to capitalise on any further major market weakness. Within the Fund we currently have 25% cash, having significantly reduced market exposures over the last few months. Frustratingly, despite our fairly cautious outlook, our major positions in Japan and Hong Kong 'H' shares have been very disappointing performers, and are the major cause of the fall in the NAV this month. Japan in particular has been most disappointing, and the response of the market to the latest central bank move is a cause of concern. Despite attractive valuations this market is headed lower and we are hedging exposures accordingly. We are also long YEN, as we believe it is a currency that will benefit in a 'crisis', as we saw in 2008.
