

JK Global Opportunities Fund

December 2021

USD Class -0.35%, GBP Class -0.43%, YEN Class -0.45%, EUR Class -0.48% in December.

The Fund fell slightly in December (-0.35%, USD Class, net of fees), resulting in a small gain for the year of +0.42%. If we break performance down over the last year, the Fund saw good gains from its European, Japanese, Taiwanese, and US equity holdings – added approximately 10% of fund value in total – with small gains from the bond book. These gains were offset by losses in Chinese equities – subtracted approximately 6% of Fund value – and the tactical currency book (small loss). More generally, we were too cautious on risk assets as a function of our bearishness over interest rates, which proved largely unfounded. A frustrating year.

Looking ahead, whilst we expect bond yields to trend higher - given that central banks will at least try to be a bit more aggressive on the policy front, much of the increase at the long-end has probably occurred. Forecasts now centre around three to four quarter point rises in the Fed funds rate this year, with another three in 2023, leaving the rate around 2% two years hence. We will see. What is interesting is that the 5Y/5Y USD inflation swap forward seems to have settled around the 2.5% level, despite the recent Fed minutes (hawkish) and high headline inflation data. The rise in yields across the curve has resulted in rising real rates (which still remain negative), and this has put pressure on risk assets. Nonetheless, we continue to believe that the scope for interest rates to rise meaningfully from here remains low, given the huge outstanding stock of debt in the global system. The US yield curve has flattened considerably and it wouldn't take much for it to invert. Ultimately negative real rates remain the only way to avoid debt deflation.

Given this outlook, we remain positive on equities. Omicron will ultimately prove positive for risk assets, as this milder but more transmissible variant speeds the transition from pandemic to endemic with a lower human toll. However, policy response remains key, with a zero-COVID strategy inappropriate and increasingly damaging to those countries and economies that choose to pursue it. The gradual pace of policy tightening is one with which risk assets should be able to cope.

The risk is of course that inflation broadens and becomes more entrenched, particularly in terms of wages and wage expectations. Such a stagflationary environment would prove challenging, both for bonds and equities. This is not our base case but is clearly a possibility.

Within equity markets, we are increasing our US exposure into the recent weakness which has resulted in some very big corrections in some of our favoured growth stocks, particularly in the tech space. As noted above, we have consistently been too cautious on the US equity market and so given the opportunity that now presents itself it seems foolish not to step in. Japan remains a favourite, where valuations look compelling, and where rising inflation expectations (albeit small) are a real positive. There is certainly value in UK/Europe, and we have been adding to exposures in the UK, via the purchase of BP and Shell, as well as the gaming stocks Entain PLC and Flutter. China remains the conundrum. Valuations look good, and sentiment is poor (usually a good sign). Policy settings look set to become more accommodative but political/policy risk remains high. We have seen the catastrophic effect policy can have on businesses and sectors within China, and so feel a healthy discount is now warranted, arguably more than ever. The property sector remains a key area of concern. However, long term we remain very optimistic on the outlook for the equity market for reasons we have described before, despite being somewhat bruised in the recent past.

We have covered our bond market short positions in to the recent uptick in yields, feeling that most of the short-term move is now behind us. Positioning is also very short and sentiment very bearish on rates which is usually a good sign that a near-term reversal is imminent. We have no strong currency views at present.

The Fund is currently 80% long a diversified group of high-quality growth companies that have excellent growth profiles and which, in many cases, have seen significant corrections over the last few months.

Happy New Year
