

JK Global Opportunities Fund

February 2015

The Fund rose +3.87% in February (GBP Class, Net of Fees) with gains across the board. The main contributor was the long position in Japanese equities, although many of the Fund's equity positions added value. For instance, the fund benefitted from the takeover of Brit PLC and from the continued strong performance from Apple Inc. The Fund's exposure to the China 'A' share market also proved profitable, and whilst we have sold-out of our position for the time being, this is a market that we are becoming increasingly bullish about medium term. Our short positions in various global bond markets were a slight negative during the month, as was the Fund's exposure to gold. These positions are held, at least in part, as a hedge against the Fund's long equity market positioning.

QE continues to inflate asset prices, and we have written many times about the effect this has had on valuations and the challenges it creates in terms of investment strategy. However, it also creates opportunities, particularly if investors can adopt a more medium term view. We feel strongly that there is very little value left in many fixed income markets i.e. government bonds, corporate bonds and index-linked bonds. In fact, we have now entered the fairyland world of NIRP (negative interest rate policy), where investors are now expected to pay many governments (at least for shorter maturities) and high quality corporates to invest with them. We view this as an extremely odd state of affairs - virtually without precedent. After all, the whole capitalist construct is built upon the premise that participants are compensated for taking risk. Whilst it is certainly possible for madness to continue awhile yet, we feel that building short positions in these asset classes with a medium term view should prove profitable.

Equities are, in general, somewhat overvalued, but less so than bonds. US equities look the least attractive short term, but markets such as Japan, China, and India look rather exciting to us. QE, whether we agree with it or not, will prove supportive for a while yet. We will remain wary, and focus only on markets that we feel offer real value and that are 'marching to their own tune' such as the above.

We remain US Dollar bulls. We have long US Dollar positions against the Korean Won, Chinese Renminbi, Singapore Dollar, Japanese YEN and Indonesian Rupiah. We believe that the US Dollar is only half way through this current bullish period, based on an historical analysis. We have to admit to being somewhat surprised that the EURO has failed to rally at all from deeply oversold levels. We are currently reviewing our lack of positioning, in light of the fact that the commencement of QE by the ECB could accelerate fixed income flows out of the EURO.

JK Global Opportunities Fund is a weekly dealing UCITS fund. It can be held by ISA's, SIPP's, Pensions, Charities, Family offices, Endowments, as a direct holding or through a Private Wealth Manager. All classes have Reporting Status.
