

JK Global Opportunities Fund

February 2018

The Fund fell -1.45% in February, (GBP Class, Net of Fees).

The Fund fell -1.45% during the month as markets sold off on concerns that inflationary pressures were building at a time when the US was embarking on a fiscal boost which the consensus believes could add 1% to GDP this calendar year. This in turn forced market participants to raise their projections for the FED funds rate by up to 50 basis points over the next 12 to 18 months. Long bonds continued their slide as a result.

In addition to the above, the FED, under new Governor Jerome Powell, is perceived as having the potential to be somewhat more hawkish, and thus less responsive to falls in the equity market than his predecessors, namely Yelland and Greenspan. All this, coupled with the usual geopolitical shenanigans has led to a somewhat more volatile and uncertain market outlook.

Our perception of FED policy is that the governors are keen to move the FED funds rate up as far as they can, prior to the larger scale bond tapering scheduled for the end of the year. Our reasoning here is that the introduction of substantial supplies of bonds has the potential to be very destabilising, with the likely impact at present difficult to model, so the Fed will want some room to lower rates if necessary. As we have noted many times before, the FED and other central banks believe the result of their abnormal monetary policies post 2008 resulted in long rates at least 50 to 100 basis points below 'equilibrium' with a resultant positive impact on all financial asset prices. Therefore, once this policy is reversed, then surely asset prices will fall? Furthermore, fundamentals, particularly in the US, continue to suggest to us that rates should be higher and the yield curve steeper. Economic growth is strong, budget deficits are set to increase, and underlying inflationary pressures are building. Such factors should lead to an increase in term premiums from current low levels. These dynamics will likely result in a steeper US yield curve than is priced in, combined with greater interest rate volatility. We remain short global bonds.

Greater volatility in asset markets suggests to us a more nimble trading approach might be rewarded. We employed just such a strategy through February which prevented much in the way of capital loss during the month's sharp sell-off. We would re-iterate though that we remain constructive on the outlook for equities in the medium term, and in particular US and Asian equities, and technology stocks. Technology is a sector to which the Fund has a large exposure, and we have been most encouraged by the strong rebound we have seen post the February correction. To us, it looks like a classic bull market.

JK Global Opportunities Fund is a weekly dealing UCITS fund. It can be held by ISA's, SIPP's, Pensions, Charities, Family Offices, Endowments, as a direct holding or through a Private Wealth Manager. All classes have UK Reporting Status.
