

JK Global Opportunities Fund

June 2020

USD Class +5.24%, GBP Class +5.73%, YEN Class +5.97%, EUR Class +5.98% in June.

The Fund rose +5.24% (USD Class, net of fees) in June, driven by broad gains in our US and China tech holdings. A notable contribution came from Hundsun Technologies, a leading Chinese fintech company whose software products continue to benefit from the digital transformation of China's financial services industry and ongoing capital market reforms/opening up. Kingsoft Cloud was another highlight, which stands to benefit from the multi-cloud trend in China's fast growing and underpenetrated cloud market. Other strong performers worth mentioning were Amazon, Microsoft, Luxshare Precision and Tesla (which we have taken profits on after its recent run). We have also sold our stake in Facebook due to the recent string of advertisers boycotting the platform on content concerns. Whilst we are aware that customer concentration is low and expect Facebook to eventually overcome this, scrutiny by advertisers will be elevated in an election year (more on this below), which means we see better opportunities elsewhere for the time being. Having said that, we are holding on to our position in Snap, which we have done well in, as we see content risks being much lower for this platform.

As lockdowns began to ease in the US last month, a handful of states witnessed renewed clusters of Coronavirus cases. We are wary of the media's hysterical coverage of this, however as long as further shutdowns remain on the table as a policy option, markets will understandably remain jittery. A more nuanced analysis of the situation reveals that more testing and a younger demographic account for a significant part of new cases, which combined with greater preparedness and treatments in hospitals will continue to drive the decoupling of new cases from mortalities in our view. We also expect any future lockdowns to be more targeted at the local level and policy to remain easy whilst the uncertainty lingers. It is also worth noting that there are over 200 potential vaccine candidates being developed globally, including 10 in human trials, and given that Coronavirus consistently ranks as investors' top concern in surveys, success in any one of these would present a huge upside surprise for markets in our view. In any case, we are investing in companies which we believe will perform well regardless of all but the very worst virus developments. All of this means that whilst we still take a glass half-full position, we accept that markets will remain volatile until a vaccine is found or local clusters dissipate.

Of course, the other side of the coin to rising cases is the impressive economic rebound we've witnessed as economies have reopened, particularly in the US. The Citi economic surprise index sits at record highs in the US for example, which usually bodes well for earnings revisions. Markets have arguably started to discount this earnings recovery, so would no doubt struggle if this failed to materialise. We are therefore more concerned about a second wave of redundancies than Coronavirus, as job retention schemes expire over the coming months at the same time unemployment benefits get scaled back in the US. Obviously, this is a double-edged sword, as it is far from ideal paying people not to work, however it is also important that policymakers avoid a cliff-edge situation. It is therefore reassuring to hear that Congress is aiming to pass another fiscal package before its second recess in early August. This will probably be in the region of $2-3trn and include more stimulus checks for households. Good news for Robinhood traders (and markets?).

As we have mentioned before, the other tail-risk for markets would be a spike in interest rates lowering the present value of already uncertain future earnings. Dovish statements from the FED last month that interest rates aren't going anywhere for the foreseeable future somewhat mitigate that, but it was the FED's internal conversations surrounding yield curve control which really caught our attention. Pinning interest rates down across the curve would lead to less crowding out of private capital from enormous and ongoing issuance of government bonds, leaving more of this excess liquidity to find its way into equity markets. Under this scenario, a melt-up in equities couldn't be ruled out, particularly as positioning remains cautious. Gold would also perform well in this environment, which is why it remains 10% of the Fund.

One of the next things on the agenda for markets is the upcoming election in the US. Whilst the polls have shifted heavily in favour of Biden recently, we think it is still too early to be drawing conclusions. Biden has certainly been helped by Trump's mishandling of the Coronavirus, and perhaps people have now just had enough of Trump's divisive character and confrontational diplomacy. On the other hand, Biden's age and waning mental agility will surely be of detriment to him as the campaign trail heats up, making the Democrat's choice of Vice President a vital one in our view. How the economy performs over the next few months will also be a key determinant of the result, as Trump has consistently measured the success of his presidency by his economic credentials. Whilst it is difficult to gauge where the marginal voter stands on all these complex socioeconomic issues, suffice to say the vested interests in the polling industry and mainstream media will make them unreliable indicators as per usual. Although the prospect of four more years of Trump's blunt style is an exhausting one to contemplate, on balance, we think his pro-business agenda makes his re-election a more favourable outcome for markets than Biden's plans to increase taxes. Markets don't appear to be pricing in a Democrat victory at the moment, so this is something we will be watching closely over the coming months.

Our final thoughts are that this remains a stock-pickers market, so our main focus continues to be on picking companies where we see visible earnings momentum. Many of these opportunities present themselves in the China A-share market, which we have been long-term bulls of, and why we have been adding to exposures here recently. We also remain short the Dollar, largely against the Chinese Yuan, due to a combination of China's relative economic outperformance, close proximity of the US election, as well as the Dollar's overvaluation. This should provide a tailwind for some relative outperformance in the China/Asia complex, which we intend to capitalise on.
