

JK Global Opportunities Fund

September 2020

USD Class -3.05%, GBP Class -3.22%, YEN Class -3.11%, EUR Class -3.15% in September.

The Fund fell -3.05% (USD Class, net of fees) in September, in line with the general risk-off action in markets which saw this year's most crowded trades give back some performance. In particular, our long positions in US and Chinese tech, as well as Gold, were the main reasons for losses in the Fund last month.

US equities took a breather in September as numerous signs emerged that the rally had got ahead of itself. Positioning became stretched in the retail community who were engaging in some highly speculative short-term options strategies. Revelations that Softbank had also been making big options bets in US tech stocks added to this perception of frothiness, which markets duly sought to unwind. This weak technical backdrop coincided with numerous headwinds in the US political sphere, namely a potentially messy US election and reduced expectations for a new stimulus package, which warranted a higher risk premium than markets had priced.

As mentioned in last month's report, we had been de-risking the portfolio as we entered this uncertain period and continued to do so throughout September, which helped limit downside. We have cut our China allocation right back to mitigate any collateral damage from Trump's campaign bluster and will maintain this cautious positioning to avoid any other 'banana skins' as we navigate through this period. Having said that, we are mindful that short-term positioning is cleaner and expectations have been reset lower as a result of this correction, which means the hurdle for an upside surprise on any of the aforementioned risks has been reduced. We therefore plan to selectively pick stocks which we have a constructive medium-term outlook on and believe have corrected too far.

One bright spot for the Fund last month was our Japan strategy, which was remarkably resilient in the face of heightened volatility elsewhere. The transition of power from Abe to Suga has gone smoothly, as expected, and in addition to continuing the market-friendly Abenomics platform, we are encouraged by his administration's greater focus on innovative initiatives such as digital transformation, which should be a tailwind for many of our portfolio companies as they are leaders in this field.

With a month to go until the US election, polls and betting markets still seems to favour a Biden win, whilst many in the investment community are beginning to ponder the implications of a 'Blue Wave' (Democratic sweep). It is far from clear to us that this is a probable outcome, but it is suggestive as to what may be priced into markets. Whilst a clear winner either way would likely spark a relief rally, a Democratic sweep would make tax increases inevitable, meaning the second-order effects could be less favourable for markets. At the other end of the spectrum, a clear win for Trump would put more tax cuts back on the agenda and present the biggest upside for markets in our view, given how little this outcome is priced. The worst result in the short-term would be a close contest in numerous swing states, which would lead to a drawn-out legal process and make it difficult to extrapolate who the likely winner is.

Looking further out, we are of the view that we are still in the early stages of a new secular equity bull market, regardless of who wins the election, and that the next big macro call to get right is timing the rotation into value. The two main catalysts we are monitoring for this are vaccine developments and inflation. In the meantime, we still see this as a stockpicker's market favouring secular growth companies, which is where our main focus lies.
